

Turn On's Slash Turn Off's

Dane Cook

There's certain things in a person that turn you on
They're called turn-on's. Teeth. I love a girl with nice teeth
If you have a nice set of teeth, that's a turn-on for me
If you open your lips and it's like "fchank fchank fchank"
If it's like a booby trap -
I don't like when you open your mouth and it's like a battle of epic
Proportions goin' on and your teeth are all screamin' at each other

"I'm a molar, wisdom tooth, get the fuck out of my gums!"

"Hi, I'm a buck tooth and I like to be outside, past the lips
I enjoy a nice sea breeze from time to time."
"Ahh! I'm the crazy yellow tooth that looks like corn!
Don't brush me! Don't brush me! I have an image to uphold
Don't brush me, I'm yellow. I'm a yellow fang."

Turn-on's. Then there's something called turn-off's and those are things
That turn you off
If you were a droid, "uhnneww", you'd be turned off
Like right off the bat, number one thing I don't like:
I don't like a stinky pussy. It's a turn-off
I don't appreciate that
Ladies, I'm sure you don't like a funky sack
But then again, that'd be a great couple

"You have a stinky pussy!"
"Smell my sack!"
"Ugh!"
"Huh?"

Turn-on's slash turn-off's - that's what we're talking about right now
